Since 1989 Association Inscire has created large-scale collaborative public works of art on ceramic tiles related to Human Rights working with partners all over the world. Initiated by Françoise Schein, the ceramic panels are part of an ongoing project that raises awareness of citizenship and human rights through the creation of permanent works in new and existing public spaces, which also offers craft skills and training to disadvantaged communities. Public works have been created in Paris, Lisbon, Stockholm, Berlin and Brussels.

For the Estação Luz subway station in Sao Paulo, a series of ceramic panels on walls and columns has been created as a pilot work working towards a 700-sq.metre project to be developed in 2011-12. The work was made with the participation of hundreds of youngsters from various underprivileged quarters of the city including the Escola Municipal de Ensino Fundamental Profª Isabel Vieira Ferreira. The project introduced pedagogical methodology and booklets to enable future teachers to teach awareness of Human Rights.

The ceramic panels were created by a Franco – Brazilian team of artists – Françoise Schein, Tatiana Amaral, and Laura Taves, Director of the Atelier Azulejaria / Tile Workshop, Rio de Janeiro, and with the workshops of the art centre at SESC Pompéia; Associação Danyann; Sao Paulo Metropolitano, and the City of Sao Paulo.

'Inscire is a non profit organization that works with local populations in communities throughout the European Union and the world to conceive and create artistic works and events which highlight human rights principles and cultural diversity, and spark discussion and reflection about both.'
